21st Century COE Internship Student

DESE, Tsinghua University, China

Aug.-Sep., 2006

First of all, thanks for the invitation of professor Taniguti and the support from 21st century COE Internship Program. The trip to Sendai is my first abroad trip, and it is a heavy-harvest and interesting tour.

I arrived in Sendai on August 1st, 2006. In the second day, professor Taniguti taught me the work I should accomplish in Tohoku University, and later we visit the labs of professor. I investigated the saccharification of lignocellulose biomass with different hydrothermal conditions, and the effect of lignin on cellulose hydrolysis. I was so pleased to attend weekly presentations in professor's group, and furthermore, I gave a presentation and communicated with the group members cheerfully.

Besides the work and experiment done in lab, I visited some famous Japanese places at the weekend. What impressed me most are the lovely seagulls and characteristic island in Matsushima and the crystal clear of Zao. Friendly Japanese, clean street, delicious foods, all these are my unforgettable memory.

At the departure time of this significant trip, I could say nothing but thanks. I hope I could take more opportunities to Japan, and contribute to the research work without national boundaries.
